

Before it gets worse...

Taking control of emergency situations.

Although medical crises at summer camp are not very common, they can and do happen. Oftentimes camps are not prepared because they do not have the medical equipment needed nor a staff that has been specifically trained to provide care in these situations. How emergencies are initially handled and tended to until an ambulance arrives is critical – especially for camps located in remote areas.

Introducing... CampMDs

Brown & Brown Sobel Affiliates is proud to team up with CampMDs to bring you an online course designed to improve the training of the medical providers at your camp. This one-hour seminar, taught by Gregory Mazarin, MD and Robert Meyer, MD – both professors at Albert Einstein College of Medicine* – teaches how best to respond to medical emergencies and provide initial emergency management until additional help arrives. It also covers what specific equipment is needed and how to ensure that equipment is readily available.

Whether your medical staff is comprised of MDs, RNs, PAs or NPs, this course is a must!

Cost: $1000 for up to ten users for the first year;
$250 to renew.

Discounts are available for non-profit institutions.
